In the compiling of this report it has been the aim and desire of the Secretary to include every point relating to the career of the Class and its individual members through the four years of College life. Thanks are due to every man who has returned his "Class Life" properly filled out, for upon these are based the facts and statistics contained in the report. To the unceasing worker for the welfare of the Harvard Students, Adolphus Terry, much credit is due of this publication. In his hands may be placed the issuance of the first reports of future Classes for much information is before him, that can be reached in no other way, and his experience in the arrangement of the material is of inestimable value.

In the matter of finances the Class, although not as strong as had been hoped, is on a sound basis, and with the accrued interest from the new Life Insurance proposition of 24 years' endowment policies to amount to $100,000.00, there should be no reunion assessments. Altogether, the financial outlook is very promising.

The Class, as a whole, has shown a growing spirit of unification, especially during its last year in College. Let us hope that this will continue and embrace those members who were not fortunate enough to have had the privilege of their Senior year at the University. The Secretary will make no attempt at a valedictory address in this short heading to his report, but only suggest that each member of the Class, having derived a great benefit from a great University, will endeavor to use this gain not only for his personal success, but for the future of the College, which has opened his eyes to life in the world.

Respectfully submitted,

WALTER TUFTS, JR., Secretary.

TREASURER'S REPORT

To the Members of the Class of 1913:

Your Treasurer begs to submit the following audited report of all receipts and expenditures of the Class Treasury from his election to office until December 31st, 1913:

Starting with a balance of $8.80 from the previous year, the total amount pledged so far has been $12,535.00. This sum is considerably smaller than that raised by the Class of 1912, but as it was pledged by less than three-quarters of the Class, it shows great generosity on the part of the contributors. It is to be expected that some portion of the first installment should remain unpaid—and the sum overdue, $581.40, is not very great—but it will be of material assistance if those payments which are overdue be sent in as soon as possible. In hopes of receiving further pledges, it has been deemed wise to depart from the usual custom and not yet to close the pledge fund. Every effort has been made to call the attention of members, who have not yet subscribed, to the fund, and it is earnestly to be hoped that as many as possible will fill out and return the special pledge blanks which were recently sent out.

For those who have already given pledges to the fund, the Gift column stands ready for further contributions at any time and any addition to it will be very welcome.

The Photograph Committee, which handled the Class Album so successfully, still has a number of books on hand. They may be secured from Robert Bowser, 52 Mt. Auburn Street, Cambridge, Mass., by sending a check for $6.40, which covers the cost of mailing.

Chairman Harry C. Everett, Jr., of the Entertainment

TREASURER'S REPORT

Committee deserves the greatest credit for turning over a substantial balance to the Class fund after paying all expenses of the Senior Picnic and other entertainments.

Believing it to be for the best interests of the Class, as well as of benefit to the University, your Treasurer has, with the advice and consent of the Class Committee, invested what money was available for investment—and will continue to do so in the future—in the Harvard Mutual Foundation, organized last year.

In closing my report, permit me to express my personal appreciation of the generous responses which has been accorded my notices.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM M. E. WHITELOCK, Treasurer.

COMMENTS FROM THE CLASS

"Numerous advantages in intellectual, emotional, and athletic pursuits are enjoyed by Harvard students which are not dreamed of by those in other universities. Two years at a small university enabled me to appreciate the many opportunities opened to me during my last two years at Harvard."

"I believe that men should think less of the A's and B's, and more of what their creditable work will mean to them and to the world when they come into actual service in life. There is too much separation between college work and the life we are to lead. The attitude at Harvard is either light and frivolous, or "grinding," with no other aim than securing scholastic honors. We should be enabled to turn our hand, with more ready and adaptable ease to the problems of life. Our college training should fit us and develop us, so that our attitude will always be healthy and progressive. Harvard College and its work should have a closer contact, connection, and a meaning associated nearer to life's activities."

"The club system at Harvard is badly organized, and too much respected. It is badly organized because the clubs overlap each other to such an extent that some men have more clubs than they can use, and others have none at all. The clubs are too much respected both in college and out of it. Men often come to Harvard feeling that they will be failures unless they make certain clubs. They are afraid to call their souls their own, until they have made a club, and pass the first year and a half in terror of doing something wrong. It would be funny, if it were not sad."

"One of the most harmful things about Harvard, is the lack of unity in college spirit. There does not seem to be any decided, positive, spirit or enthusiasm among the students as a whole. A woeful lack of the do-or-die spirit that is often attributed to our well-known rival. The athletic teams, as teams, appear to possess this loyalty, but the hundreds of students, who are merely spectators, seem to have no real feeling for their Alma Mater. The fact that in football, for example, there is no cheering at all during the games until the Brown game, shows the lack of any real enthusiasm."

"Many a freshman is dismayed by the apparent unconcern of the student body as to the outcome of any contest, and he remains silent during a game for fear of being considered queer if he expresses his feelings audibly."

"I should not advise anyone to go through college in three years. It means either spending all one's time studying and neglecting social life or else more time than can well be afforded will be spent on the outside life, skimping courses and getting low marks. Moreover if the boy does not remain in college his fourth year doing graduate work, he misses one of the best years of his college life. The social life is just as important as the educational one. The friendships made during college are usually valuable and lasting. Three years' work means either the sacrifice of many friends or decent marks, under ordinary circumstances, and neither can well be spared as will be realized more and more when out of college and earning a living."

"I believe that the Institute of 1770 (and D. K. E.) is, in its present form, a source of much of the excess to which the private school crowd at college gives way. It's large membership causes failure to make the Institute appear almost a dishonor in the eyes of the private school sophomore. Their conduct is based entirely upon what they think would be most conducive towards bringing them membership in either club, and as I have said their influence is not of the best. It splits the class until senior year, into "Dickey men" and "Non Dicky men."

"Better opportunities should be afforded to the great mass of students who are not fit to make the teams to represent the college, for athletics of all kinds for the sake of physical development and health. To encourage the average students to take part in athletics, it seems to me necessary that some provisions should be made to organize sports for them. Athletic sports for health and physical development should prevail at Harvard."

"Revitalized systems of Faculty and seniors advisers."

"Grades should mean more nearly the same thing with all instructors; as it is, for example C may mean from 70 to 80 or from 50-75, according to different men's ideas or whims. This is hard on both students and markers."

"The Dean's Office is overworked. It would seem to be possible to remedy this and improve things generally by having more Deans; as has been more than once considered. Lack of contact is not due to their lack of interest but because they are human in their capabilities and the day is only 24 hours long."

"More attention ought to be given to securing professors of personality, not Ph.D's. There is lacking a sentiment of regard for scholastic work."

"Athletics are somewhat overemphasized, especially in the social life of the College. The almost regular election of the captain of the football team as First Marshal is an example of this. Football men and others engaged in major sports, seem also to have the precedence over scholarship men in fraternal circles and the social life of Harvard at large. The "Office" might be humanized to a large extent, especially in the enforcing of the "prep. school rules" regarding cutting classes just before Xmas or Easter vacations. It might deal more leniently with men having six courses a year as regards attendance."

"In regard to Harvard College in general, I consider one of the weakest points is the system of advisers. After talking to all my friends, I have come to the conclusion that these men are generally good men, who would like to help the students if they could, but they do not know how. Practically in every case I have considered these men know nothing beyond their own courses. Senior advisers are really more competent to advise the first year's work of a Freshman."

"I have failed to find the personal contact with professors and instructors, which is a natural condition of affairs at a large college, but which is needed nevertheless. The position of "section men" should be made more effective."

"For me two of my courses were made almost a task because of section men who did not know how to teach,—notably Phil. E. Section men should not be appointed to give them teaching practice."

"The system of professional tutors like 'King' and 'Parker' and others of his type, should be carefully supervised by the instructors. Too many men get the tutoring habit by being encouraged by those men who make their living by stuffing a student's head full of convenient information for next day's exam. If Harvard is to stand for creditable scholarship, should not men who really need the tutoring be advised by their instructors. There always will be men who need a crutch now and then, but its too easy to get the leaning habit, and in justice to the students themselves tutoring should be carefully supervised by Harvard instructors."

"A man gets about as much recognition in College as he deserves, no matter who he is; but a great number get more than they deserve. In entering competition for anything, the papers or the teams, the large preparatory school man stands at an advantage, for he knows, from his upper class friends, what is expected of him. In the fairest competition, the man from the unknown school runs his chances while he is learning the ropes. By an extension of the Senior Adviser System into the Territorial Club movement, the condition might be improved."

BACCALAUREATE SERMON

To the Class of 1913

BACCALAUREATE SERMON

PRESIDENT ABBOTT LAWRENCE LOWELL

When Saul saw David go forth against the Phillistines he said to Abner, the Captain of the Army: 'Abner, whose son is this?' And Abner said: 'As thy soul liveth, O King, I cannot tell.' "

SAMUEL I, 17, 55.

This was a fatal moment in the history of Israel, the nation which was bound to influence more deeply than any other the religious opinion of modern Europe, which was in sore stress, and, in fact, in danger of extinction.

Until David appeared to go out against Goliath nobody else dared to, and it looked as though their armies would be hopelessly defeated and driven back. Just then there appeared this young shepherd. Now, David had three qualifications for going forth against Goliath. One of them was that he had the heroism to expose himself to what was believed to be absolutely certain death, and, secondly, he had the faith that he would succeed, and the third quality that he had was the good sense, the intelligence, the wisdom, call it what you please,—in short, the imagination to understand that there was no use to oppose a giant by brute force, and that his only chance lay in the use of a missile.

Without going into the question of predestination we may fairly say that Christianity is ruled entirely by faith. It requires men having authority in the government of the world, so as to make it possible for man to help and not hinder the plan of God. Men can regulate the future of mankind on this plan. But if we do not believe in fatalism imposed on mankind as a whole, we are, nevertheless, in very serious danger of falling into a belief of another kind,—the fatalism which is called the fatalism of the multitude. We are a little too much inclined to think that the individual is carried along by the spirit of his age, and that he has all he can do to go along with that spirit.

Now, that is not true. Men are not necessarily sheep. Men do not have to behave like sheep. James Russell Lowell in the later years of his life remarked that he had seen many spirits of the age and some of them never came on, and that is unquestionably true. It is very much in the hands of any man, who chooses to do so, to have a very perceptible influence on the spirit of the age in which he lives and on the destiny of the age which is to follow. There has never been any time in the history of the world when the opportunity for the individual man has been so great as it is in the years that lie immediately before us today. The world is more plastic than it has ever been before; the world is less held by its fixed traditions. It is more ready to adopt new ideas; it is more ready to turn into new paths. It is less content with the conditions it has reached, the results already achieved, than it has been in any period of history. The world is ready to follow.

I have said nothing, as you observe, as yet of politics, because in this country politics can hardly be said to be a profession in a desirable sense. Nevertheless, politics is the business of every single man. If democracy means the right of every one to take an interest and a part in public affairs, it means, also, that he should do so. In the past, democracy meant the opportunity of every man to put forth his utmost effort. Now, in politics we need you more than we ever needed those before. What we need is not a larger number of itinerant vendors of patent remedies. What we need is men who will make a scientific diagnosis of the disease from which the public suffers. We want to have men who will think out the questions which we shall encounter,—who will think them out scientifically and earnestly,—who will face them fearlessly, because, remember this, the men who have rarely stood in the forefront of the advance of civilization have not usually found themselves shouting with the largest crowd. We require, above all, courage, and the courage we require is not only the courage of action; it is the courage of thought, the courage of thinking right. If the men in the country who have this feeling would think right, the getting right would follow almost as a matter of course.

Now, to return to my text for a moment. In days like those of Saul and Israel, it was almost impossible for a young man without family, without wealth, without standing in the community, to go forth as a leader. But it is an everyday fact today that any man can go forth as a leader, if he has qualities which make him fit to do it.

Now, let us note this one thing about that. Just as in David's case the victory is not to the strong. David, as I have said, had the wit to see that there was no use facing a giant by brute force. He could bring no brute force to compare with that of the giant. It was the intelligent use of the means that lay within his reach.

We are to accomplish results in the world by knowing how to do it, and, therefore, it is that we speak with more confidence to educated men, for it is the educated man to whom we look forward to solve all the problems that we have.

Moreover, let me point out to you another thing. The achievement is not only for those who are abnormally gifted.

William James, I remember when I was in College, pointed out to me how many young men there were who never succeeded in accomplishing anything. He said, "Ability is very well, but many men of ability fall by the wayside and never reach any particular goal for lack of enterprise, lack of industry, lack of those things which we sum up under the general heading of force of character." And William James was in the habit of saying to his classes, and elsewhere, that any man who would devote his whole strength for a sufficient number of years to mastering any subject would wake up some day to find he was an authority on that subject, and an authority means a leader in thought. Any man who has the force of character can accomplish much. But without force of character, which means earnestness, determination, persistence and industry, talent is of little value of any kind, and any man who has those moral qualities will accomplish more than he or his friends ever dreamed was within his reach.

HARVARD, 1913—CLASS REPORT

Now, let me point out one other thing to you, and that is what we mean by accomplishing something. Are you thinking of reputation? If your idea is reputation, you will get your reward. Reputation is a fairly easy thing to get. A little judicious advertising and a little putting forth of one's self will bring a great deal of reputation. Reward is not necessarily of real value to a man who has a deep, earnest conviction of what he wants to do in life. It is the act which is the life itself, and not the fame of it which is precious. If that is what your object is, remember that any man with force of character who will make himself the master of anything by persistence and by energy can do the act and live the life which will tell, whether the world outside ever knows it or not. And he can do it more than ever before because the world is in a plastic state, where anybody can put it in his hand and build the mould.

I can remember very well the people of the past generation—the generation which is now going off the stage—I can remember their point of view, and I remember their point of view as to the extent that the little man chose to make himself a marked man. If he chose to have an influence upon the current events of the world, if he chose to be a man who was at the helm, he might well do it, but one was under no obligation to do it.

It seems to me that the view of life in that respect has changed, that we recognize that wherever there is an opportunity there is a duty. We recognize that if David should have killed Goliath it was his duty to do so. We recognize that David would not only not have been a hero, but he would have been a sinner, if he simply sat down and said, "I am content, let him who wants to go forward against Goliath." I cannot myself conceive how any man with a heart in him can see the battle of the world going on before his face and not take an active part in it.

Those of us who are past middle life look to the young men in whose training we are proud to have had a share, to help the world forward on its way, and we look to them with confidence.

BACCALAUREATE HYMN

DANIEL SARGENT

(Tune: Alford, Ten Thousand Times Ten Thousand.)

The stars of blessed memory
Shine out of yesterday,
The dawn our hopes see in the sky
Gleams on our shadowed way;
Yet all these rays of glory
Would be but candle light,
If only God who gave us eyes
Now stood before our sight.

God grant us years unnumbered,
And cloudless toiling days,
And may we reap a harvest rich
With which to give Thee praise,
Yet if this glowing instant
Be all our life can be,
May we therein live through a life,
Made grand and deep by Thee.

This brightly burning moment
Brings us before Thy face,
The glass is dark, yet to our eyes
Streams in Thy radiant grace;
And when our flesh-bound spirit
Its cloak has thrown away,
Our words will rise like tongues of fire
To praise Thee for this day.—Amen!

CLASS DAY EXERCISES

June 17, 1913

CLASS ORATION

"THE ROTTEN RAGS OF MEMORY."

DANIEL SARGENT.

Prince Hal had been crowned King, and Falstaff had ridden all night in order that he might stand outside Westminster Abbey and greet the young monarch as he came from his coronation, but Prince Hal walked solemnly by, chatting with the Lord Chief Justice, and refused to recognize his dust-stained friend of yesterday. Today we cannot help feeling somewhat like Prince Hal, for now that we are kings, we scarcely deign to nod at the humdrum thoughts with whom we lived in the drudgery of yesterday, and we listen to higher thoughts as if they were not only our best, but even our most familiar counsellors. Gratitude walks by our side, like the Lord Chief Justice, and reminds us of what we owe to our University. Memory speaks to us, and describes our old friendships in new words, while ambition encourages our hopes with fairy-tales of the future.

All these voices we welcome on this day, for their eloquence impresses upon us the meaning of this occasion, and there is another voice which we do not welcome, but which we cannot help hearing, even if we do not heed. It whispers sneeringly in our ear words, which, if listened to, would chill our enthusiasm, and make us laugh at the very solemnity of our faces. I do not mean the voice of ingratitude, or of pleasant memory, or of fear of failure. I mean a voice less easy to contradict, and far more discouraging, which says to us patronizingly, "You are acting out a mock-heroic comedy which might be laughable if it had not been played so many times before." I mean the voice which takes away from us that invigorating feeling that we are doing something new, and which makes the world a dusty, immovable and ancient place in which every thing has long ago been said and done.

It is customary on a solemn occasion such as this, when we almost nurse our deeper emotions to treat this voice as if it were a ghost not to be mentioned, and certainly not to be spoken to. Contrary to this wise custom I am going to challenge it. Like Hamlet I call on this ghost to speak "Who are you? and what have you to say?"

"I am the voice of Memory," says the ghost, "who have seen all the ages follow one another in an endless circle, and have heard the things that you are going to say so many times before, that I have a right to smile."

There is a great deal said and with truth, about the inspiration that memory can give to us, but does not memory also discourage us by making us feel that we are plodding through a second-hand world? How much more wide awake should we be to the mere excitement of being alive if we had the explorer's feeling that we were going into a world which had hitherto been unknown to man. If only we could forget that anyone else had ever lived, that anyone had ever spoken, how much more freshly invigorating would life seem to us.

But we cannot, and must not forget, for though forgetting might help us to see and feel with a new zest, it would take away from us our skill, and would allow us to make the mistakes which the past has taught us to avoid. Thus we are forced to wear what the poet Blake called "the rotten rags of memory," merely to cover our own nakedness. What we must do, therefore, is not to forget the old, but to make the old new, to transform our memory into knowledge, to see for ourselves instead of relying on words to see for us. The difference between knowledge and memory is this: that whereas memory can speak, can build buildings, and pass examinations, it is only knowledge that can see, and enjoy life. By knowledge, however, I do not mean what is popularly and falsely called knowledge; I mean almost what we sometimes call understanding.

Our materialistic misconceptions have confused knowledge with words, whereas of course, words are not in themselves knowledge, but simply sign-posts which the pioneers along the path of life have set up to guide us in our search for knowledge. This confusion has resulted in the superstitious belief that knowledge is a kind of patent medicine which can be sold over a counter for a few cents. According to this theory, the man who wishes to acquire knowledge has simply to pay the money, and then swallow the medicine without spilling it. Unfortunately this sort of patent medicine is not a cure-all, and the man who after drinking it, stands licking his lips, expecting to find himself grown suddenly wise, is disappointed, or at least his friends are disappointed. As a result of this disappointment, this nation places but little faith in knowledge, and the only pride that it has in it, is a commercial prize in is low pride, in the excess of supply over demand. We count with materialistic satisfaction, not only our wealth in gold, but our wealth in facts. We almost measure our national enlightenment by the number of people who can read and write, and we sometimes even judge the knowledge of our friends, by the number of books they have read. No wonder knowledge has a pure reputation in the community!

But if knowledge is not a patent medicine, what is it? True knowledge, which can be acquired by no machine, however efficient, but simply by a human being, is made up of but one thing; experience or life, and what has not come into our experience we cannot know. It is convenient to have a dictionary on your desk, and it is even more convenient to have stored in your brain the names and dates of the Kings of England, or the facts concerning sheep-raising in Kamchatka, for the dictionary will help you to spell, the names and dates will help you to look intelligent when somebody alludes to William the Conqueror, and your facts about sheep-raising may help you to make money. But such things are not knowledge unless they have been taken into our flesh and blood, unless they have risen before our eyes to take their places in our view of life.

The educational machinery of our civilization in the form of printing presses, schools, libraries and what-not, which are simply means of extending our memory, have given to us not knowledge but words, so that we are as a nation in the position of children who have inherited much gold and who spend it lavishly without knowing exactly what they are doing. As a result, never in the history of the world has there been such a hubbub of people talking as there is in this country at the present. Unfortunately most of this talking is like organized cheering far louder and far more frequent than our feelings demand. We have become so used to organized chering that we are almost surprised when the foreigner laughs at it, and we are so used to hearing organized talk that we have ceased to be surprised if it says nothing. We have simply lost our respect for ideas, and although we think them sometimes interesting, and always suitable for holidays, we regard them as having no organic relation to life.

At the same time we should be thankful for the words that we have inherited. They are as valueless and as valuable as gold, and all that we have to do in order to transmit them into knowledge is to make them our own. If we do not do that, they are simply so much dead weight holding us back. We carry away from college at least three things: first training; second, mere facts; and third, experience. Perhaps during the last four years we have been forced to learn seven reasons for the outbreak of Hundred Years War. If we have, the training that we get from the process will always remain with us, the facts that we memorized will probably be forgotten, but any sympathetic understanding of how the world looked to the English or French at the time, will always help us to see, and to know what we are doing ourselves. We have come to college to extend the realm of our experience, to widen our horizon by climbing out of the valley of time and space in which we happened to be born, in order that we can thereby look around us and have some view of our position in the universe. To help us to accomplish this, lectures are delivered to us, and books are put at our disposal, but too often we refuse their help. Some men look at books not for their human value, but merely in order to get from them those facts which will equip them to enter the profession which they have chosen. Are not such people forgetting that living is after all our vocation; whereas our profession is simply an avocation. We are men before we are lawyers, or brokers, or doctors, or ministers.

CLASS ORATION

If you can look at a person whom you do not know and say with truth, "That is a doctor" or "that is a lawyer," the person is by that very thing condemned as not being a man but a section of a man. If you had lived in the Elizabethan age, could you have told by looking at Shakespeare what profession he belonged to? Would you have called Sir Walter Raleigh a courtier, a poet, a historian, or an explorer? These men did not belong to a profession, but to life, and that, incidentally is why they succeeded in their professions. Because we want to be men who can see life, and not merely workers stooping blindly over our tasks, we read books not only in order to get from them dead and convenient information but living views of life, expressed by other human beings. We read books in order that even without small intellectual stature, we can stand on the shoulders of the giant minds of all time, and see life as they have seen it. But at the same time we must remember that knowledge must be built upon individual independence. In reading especially we must be careful that we do not sell our birthright, by closing our own eyes and letting another man see for us. No other man can see for us, we must know for ourselves. As a nation we Americans are said to have little reverence for the wise opinions of the past, and we like to think that that is a sign of our intellectual independence. If it were, we might have some cause for pride. If we were only as self-sufficient as Hume, it would be excusable if we should say, as he said, "If I had read as many books as most people, I should be almost as big a fool." Unfortunately that is not the case. On the contrary, our contempt for the past is simply a sign that we have shifted our dependence from the lofty wisdom of great men, to the low opinions of the public.

We have freed ourselves from our bondage and become slaves to another. It in no way shows that we are duly impressed by our intellectual responsibility.

If we sit here at the present moment without feeling that we have neglected our opportunities to talk with the great men of the past, without feeling that we have failed to enlarge our experience as we have had a chance to do by living in other ages, and in other minds, our ambition must be low and feeble. But if we feel that we are wholly dependent on what others have said, and on what others have done, our case is equally lamentable. There is something lacking in a young man if he is not at times capable of a good healthy scorn of the platitudes of the past, if he does not want at times to tear off the rotten rags of memory. There is something sheep-like and tame about him if he does not feel dissatisfied with what even the greatest minds have said, if he has not some of that inquerable wildness in him which, though it is the source of much trouble, is at the same time, the power behind all progress. If we have allowed the mastering influence of education to whip us into intellectually harmless lap-dogs, it is a reflection on our individual vitality. Are we not human beings? Have we not eyes? Let us therefore use them for ourselves, and when we describe what we see let us remember that we are responsible to our intellectual integrity for every word that we allow to come into our minds. If the blind words that memory has given us, are grander than the knowledge that we have earned, let us have the sincerity to forget appearances and cast those words aside. It is our privilege to accept the dust of the past; it is our duty to make that dust live by infusing it with the blood from our own veins. Only in that way can we banish the ghost which tries to make us think that life is old, simply because words are old. Such a ghost cannot stand in the light of knowledge, for the eye of knowledge sees that the world is not old. The old world is dead, and a new world is being born every moment. This instant of time which is now sweeping over us has never been felt by mortal man before. We are the first that ever looked into the boundless life that opens up ahead of us. We balance on the brink between two dark eternities; our torches have been lighted, and now shoulder to shoulder we stand ready to march on in our journey into that land which is the only land a man should seek to enter—the land of the unknown.

CLASS POEM

AMOS PHILIP McMAHON.

Life stands upon the hill and calls;
The road invites, and the open sea;
Farewells are said; I rise and go
Where life waits in the morning glow,
And bids me come!

To much of strife
Consumes our life!
The world has taken dross to wife,
With pearls and pearls
Has wound her hair,
And make her face so wondrous fair,
One scarce may know the harpy there;
Has put such power within her hand
That few there are who understand,
When truth obeys, and lies command!

The will to see; the will to be!
To know life understandingly!
Much might be righted in a night,
If the unseeing were taught sight!

The winds blow in across the sea,
Whispering mystery of far lands,
The lure of storms that are to be,
And sea-wreck writhing on white sands,
With tale of treasures in soft snows
Of breaking foam, where no ship goes.

Dare to heave anchor, sail, be free!
To ride before the winds at sea,
Stake life on conquest, if must be!

HARVARD, 1913—CLASS REPORT

Or choose the city's shore, and dare,
Though bitter death and want lurk there,
The burden of men's needs to bear!

Behold the city, where it gleams,
Star-touched upon a hill of dreams!
Whose million lights and million lights
Have hung for tens of thousand nights
Like glow-worms paused between two flights!
And from a multitude of towers,
Sweet bells, soft-lipped, tell out the hours.

The world has taken dross to wife!
The city this, upon her breast
Is trade in crafty beauty dressed
To hide the truth that here are men
Whose labor is but vain, for ten
Attain where thousands try,
While day and night their trades they ply
Through which the luxuries are made
That fatten bargains, foster trade.

To hide the truth that hosts of men
Shoulder to shoulder, noon and night
Travel abreast a bridge condemned,
Full in the glare of the city's light!
For a little gold
Their souls are sold
That one man may improve his hold
On wealth already manifold!

To hide the truth that when bands play
And grim-faced soldiers march away,
While brave flags flutter, because men say
"Our heroes must right wrong and see
No violence to liberty"—
Too often some there are who smile
And watch the puppets move, the while
See in war trade's cunning guile!

CLASS POEM

To hide the truth that here is shame
Too strange and horrible to name,—
That human life is trafficked in,
And innocence condemned to sin!

Too much of strife
Consumes our life!
The world has taken dross to wife;
With pearls and pearls
Has wound her hair,
And made her face so wondrous fair,
One scarce may know the harpy there!
The will to see; the will to be!
Here lies the heart of the mystery!

So little may we see and know
Who all day through rough channels go,
So crowded is this human main
And hindered by the need of gain,
That while we steer our passage through
Our eyes are blind to the broader view!

Where are the leaders here? to say
“This is the gold, this dross, look well!”
By depth of studied lore to tell
What plans were set and what befell
In history’s yesterday.

Where are the leaders here? to be
Of such large heart and sympathy
That each of us in him may know
The master, brother, hero, friend,
Zealous to teach, inspire, defend,—
To whom we freely go.

Life stands upon the hill, and calls;
The road invites, and the open sea;
Farewells are said; I rise and go
Where life waits in the morning glow,
And speaks to me:

There comes a man whom the world obeys!

IVY ORATION

PAUL MERRICK HOLLISTER.

Ladies and Gentlemen; Suffering Classmates, and Suffragettes; I am very glad to be able to introduce the serious note into such a noteworthy day. The other day I had a conversation with Professor Terry, of U Four: I said "What shall I get off for my speech on Class Day, Terry?" He said, "Get off the platform." I felt very sad. It was still more depressing to come here and find the Stadium in tiers and you good people all up in the air. But while you were rejoicing that for a time at least there are no Freshmen, a message came to me from the Faculty's best friend, once removed—a message to you all. It is dated "the Tower of London, June 17," and reads as follows:

"The only food I have had for two weeks is food for thought. Sorry not to be with you, but when I get out of jail, I am coming to America, to join the I. W. W."

(Signed) Mrs. Pankhurst.

There is a portent in this cablegram: it means that we of Nineteen Thirteen, that you of every other class from Noah, 1636, down to the youngest member of Nineteen Sixteen, and every one of your omnipresent relatives, must help the Cause. And our battle-cry shall be not "Votes for Women," as it is in England, but "Votes for Ladies."

See what militancy has done in our very midst. Look at that triumph of stone-age architecture, that inverted table, whose bare legs have for years shocked the Cambridge Atmosphere—I mean Gore Hall. Where is it now? Blown up, and the blasting was done at two o'clock in the morning. Block after block was torn down—two blocks more, and the destruction would have been on the Square. When Mrs. Pankhurst herself was in Cambridge two years ago, there was an explosion of hot air in Brattle Hall which shook the very foundations of University Four. Militancy has crept into journalism: the Illustrated was blown up for trying to show Dartmouth why she lost that game. And only last evening a Crimson candidate was riding his bicycle round and round this track; as he passed the door there he heard the ringing of a bell. Being a keen sort of a dog for news, he stopped, after he had passed the sound eleven or twelve times, and found, concealed under the stonework, this infernal machine. He rushed back to the office, seized a typewriter, and wrote this headline:

“Big Ben Buried Beneath Stadium; No Cause for Alarm.” It is rumored too, that the Postmen’s Ball was broken up by the arrival of some Bums from Harvard.

So you see there is a future ahead of us; in five years ninety per cent. of the class will either be in high office, as a reward for their efforts to procure the vote for the gentler and much more expensive sex, or else in jail. We might be chauffeurs or burglars, but why not be militant suffragettes?

Thirteen is a lucky number. You may recall that the success of 1912 in athletics lies in the fact that 1 and 9 and 1 and 2 make thirteen. We have seen three parades at New London, and the end is not yet, for the Yale crew is suffering from a stroke of Reversed English. Thirteen escorted President Lowell into office. We have trod the primrose path of Electives, Probation, and First-Aid-from-the-Widow; and we all went to New Haven last November, with the result that this Spring, for the first time in history, someone was heard to smile on Tap Day. There is now in the Chair of Athletics a tack, called Oral Examination. We saw October twelfth given the Knights of Columbus as a legal holiday, thereby evening up the score with the Ancient Order of Hibernians, who celebrate March 17 as the day on which Saint Patrick came from Ireland to Boston. Truly the old order changeth: Freshman dinners are held in the Walker-Gordon laboratory, and no reporters are allowed. To those reporters we are indebted for various lurid tales of how much money Harvard spends for the necessities of life, when goodness knows we have been since freshman year just about two jumps and a half ahead of a ravening pack of bill-collectors. The reporters are now curbed a bit—ah, that is a good one, that “curbed a bit”—by the new official censor, the Harvard Suppress Club.

And now, before we disintegrate, to spread all over the Red-Oak-Grove, a word of advice. As you stand with your five dollars' worth of near-Sheepskin in your hand, and your make-up on, ready to make your début on the stage of Life—isn't that a pretty figure—remember that a little Knowledge is a dangerous thing—dangerous to the other fellow; remember too, that it is better to have acquired a slight Jag on the Class Spirits that have bubbled from this last Arcadian Spring, than never to have drunk at all; and remember above all that your claim to fame is this: you are members of Lucky Thirteen.

CLASS ODE

WILLIAM ROGER BURLINGAME

We have entered thy gates at the morning of youth,
In the boldness of ignorant pride,
We have passed through the portals of infinite truth
Led by thee, our protector and guide.
We leave thee this night for the ends of the earth
And the outermost parts of the sea,
Where the fame of our deeds and the praise of our worth
Shall belong not to us but to thee.

In the dusk of the twilight, the threshold of night
On the eve of tomorrow's unknown,
Let us linger awhile in the still-burning light
Of a star that is shining alone.
Fair guide of our hearts in the dawn of our day,
Quiet hope in each season of pain,
Through the darkness of age be the light of our way,
Lead us back to our mother again.

“DE ACADEMIA HARVARDIANA FUTURA.”

GEORGE HUSSEY GIFFORD

Libenter, Harvardiani, cum ideo sim delectus, ut pro sodalibus hunc conventum illustrissimum adloquar, non quidem facundia quaquam fretus, sed tot honestissimorum conspectu incitatus. simulque academiae laudandae cupiditate incensus, orationem meam incipio, quam auribus obsecro benignis audiat.

Te primum, igitur, praeses magnifice, salvere iubeo, non solum quod scriptis optimis de rebus civilibus te inter eruditos spectatum fecisti, neque quod nocte dieque ad universitatem bene gerendam neque operae parcis nec labori, sed ideo praesertim quod nobis te, non dicam magistrum benignum et fidum monitorem praebuisti, sed multo magis vere amicum.

Te civium Massachusettensium ornatissime, qui per tot annos vero patriae amore incensus, tandem aliquando in sellam gubernatoris pervenisti, unde iam tertio anno rem publicam consiliis dirigis sapientibus, te facere non possum quin laudibus extollam.

Te quoque, episcopo praestantissime, qui ad insulas longinquas Christi evangelium attulisti, te in has sedes libenter excipit academia Harvardiana, quae iam inde a principio se Christo et ecclesiae probavit dedicatam.

Et te, doctor venerande, qui dum assidue colis ea studia quae inventutem alunt, senectutem oblectant, tam praeclare de academia meruisti, deditorum his studiis te praestantissimum minimus ego laetus ad salutandum adeurro.

Sed alios permultos video quos singulatim nominare nimium fuerit longum. Nonne enim adsunt socii et inspectores, viri summo amore summaque diligentia academiae conservandae et augendae dediti? Quid? quod decanos ordinis academici videmus, viros honestissimos, et professores doctos et benignos, qui tanta nobis bona tradiderunt ut vix possimus gratias referre idoneas. Salvete tamen, magistri carissimi, et nos scitote haud facile disciplinae vestrae fore ut obliviscamur.

Vos quoque salvete, parentes benevoli, quibus summas oportet reddere gratias. Nam nos pecunia, consiliis, hortationibus, omni denique auxilio, tanta sedulitate, tanto amore adiuvistis, ut paene dicam omnia quae simus adepti, curae vestrae nos debere.

Adsunt vero aliae quas nefas ni protinus salutare festinem. Nonne enim vos potissimum laetemur adloquentes, puellae formosae et amabiles? Quas iam inde a pueris cum primum varbum, “amo, amare—” balbutire disceremus, et musas inspiratrices et comites habuimus incundissimas. A nobis igitur, qui semper servorum et amatorum nomine gloriabimur, plurimam accipite et laetissimam salutem.

Non mihi opus est dicere, sodales, quantum has sedes amoenas pigeat relinquere, ubi annos iam quattuor degimus, quos ob studia feliciter gesta, ludos et iocos animose excicatos, amicitias denique optimis auspiciis inceptas, laetissimos vitae forsitan contigerit appellare. Nam saepe ut opinor in his ultimis diebus, non sine dolore omnes cognovimus, iam iam esse discendum, et separatim in cunctas undique partes eundum ut rei familiari provideamus. Attamen non possunt absentia extinguere tales amicitiae, non potest haec liberalium artium doctrina funditus oblivione deleri; quin potius talium memores, eo magis id agamus, ut frugi nos et pios almae matris filios approbemus.

Vobis nunc, academiae fautores et alumni, hoc volo confirmare, nos qui hodie baccalaurei gradum simus adepturi, non omnino esse indignos qui in societatem vestram nobilissimam recipiamur. Nam nobis quoque cordi et ipsis est gloria Harvardiana; quin etiam, ut iuvenes praecipue decet, visionem percepimus universitatis futurae.

Illa re vera, a fortibus viris et generosis condita, munificis et benevolis aucta, doctis et diligentibus sustentata, iam per multa saecula gloriosa vivit. Nunc autem quod maxime decet, nova petit consilia, novasque captat laudes.

Iam enim haud procul hinc terra effoditur ut bibliothecam erigamus amplissimam; deinde iuxta Carolum fluvium omnia sunt parata, ut ibi pro novis discipulis domicilia struamus omni lepore et amoenitate praedita; denique quod nos paucis nummis contributis ipsi incepimus, vos autem et ceteri academiae fautores maioribus impensis adjuvare debetis, gymnasium mox habebimus, et magnitudine et utilitate omnium lautissimum.

At non aedificiis tantum, sed multis aliis rebus auctam video gloriam academiae. Nam in athleticis certaminibus victorias illas quas iam sumus consecuti, nihil aliud credo denuntiare nisi plures et iteratos triumphos futuros, praesertim cum illum exercitorem peritissimum qui nuper campestria proelia tam bene direxit rursus in triennium habeamus conductum. Nec setius opinor Minervae donis collegium florebit.

Quare, fratres carissimi, non est de academia desperandum. Habemus praesidem memorem officii, oblitum sui; habemus professores et universum ordinem academicum pro bono universitatis unum atque idem sentientem. Gaudeamus igitur, quod ut nunc florentem, ita mox auctiorem et splendidiorem videbimus eam almam matrem, quae dat filiis abundanter neque obiurgat. Foveamus quoque et colamus, famamque per hanc patriam et universum orbem festinemus pervulgare, denique etiam deo optimo maximo precemur ut vivat, crescat, vigeat in perpetuas aeternitatis.

DISQUISITION

HARVARD'S RADICALS

PARK JERAULD WHITE, JR.

Thanks chiefly to the beneficent influence of the yellow press, the idea seems to prevail that Harvard's radicals are a group of anaemic but ferocious young reprobates who hold occasional meetings in a carefully insulated dormitory room. Here we are led to believe they concoct their schemes to blow up Universes in general and this Universe in particular until they get the kind of Universe they want; that from these seething conclaves they go forth to be friends to Socialist leaders and even to militant suffragettes, to bring upon themselves such terrifying headlines as "Harvard a Hotbed of Socialism," and so on to what end we know not.

If we follow a distinctly modern tendency and investigate for ourselves, we find that our worthy organs of publicity have good reason for holding the Harvard radicals up to the view of the gaping public. For they are interesting,—interesting enough to be worth defining. By way of a definition, let us say that they are the men in the University who believe that the present state of society is fundamentally, radically wrong,—that social justice and the greatest happiness will never be attained while the principles now regarded as sacred continue to prevail. They will have no palliatives. They throw no Standard Oil on the troubled waters of social unrest. Causes are all that interest them.

Let us include in our definition only those radicals who are organized,—in other words, the members of the Harvard Socialist Club. Other radicals there are who have not seen fit to take advantage of the influence which comes with organization.—possibly because they are too radical. But it would not profit us to consider those whose only symptom of radicalism is a mild dislike of present social conditions, which finds expression in neatly type-written theses. Again, the religious radicals, more commonly known as heretics, need not disturb us here. They are usually satisfied with shocking their friends, and find a harmless vent for their thoughts in violent systems of philosophy.

The Socialist Club should claim our attention because its interest is in society, and because it is carrying on so active a work in the University. Its purpose, according to its constitution, is "to study Socialism and all other radical programs of reform which aim at better organic development of society." Naturally, the members are for the most part Socialists; but all radicals, from men who want to smash to men who simply want to know, have always been welcomed as members.

It is from this stronghold that the radicals have done their real work and made themselves known. They have achieved a success which has won them considerable attention from University Hall, the usual exaggeration from the yellow press, and amusement from the indifferent. They have carried their message to the student world through their meetings, through lectures by prominent radicals like Victor Berger and Lincoln Steffens. They have turned their literary powers to account by becoming editors of the college papers. They have gone forth among the undergraduates as wolves in the midst of sheep, winning election to everything but social clubs. The sheep among whom they rove eye them from behind intellectual ramparts with a lofty amusement which sometimes changes to noisy contempt.

To what purpose is all their work, all their expenditure of brains and talent? First, they are accomplishing what radicals have accomplished since Socrates pronounced himself the gadfly of Athens: they are waging war against indifference to social problems. Whatever else may be said of them, the fact remains that they are continually reminding their less interested fellows of the need of a world of men.

Second, they are endeavoring in every way to be true to their principles. Of course, they have no monopoly on this characteristic. Yet this it is that makes them the most conspicuous anomaly, apparently the most unaccountable contradiction in terms ever foisted upon a University. In the bread-and-butter world outside the college walls, we can bring ourselves to see where the radicals get their idea that private ownership of public property is all wrong. The empty stomach, as we all know, is responsible for the very existence of the radicals.

In this respect, at least, the Harvard radicals find themselves in a far better situation than their friends in the outside world. For they have little occasion to engage in hand-to-hand encounters with the cost of living. Their greatest trouble lies not in wringing an existence from an unkind world, but in being consistent in their relations with Alma Mater. They are the black sheep of her family. The capitalists, the conservatives, have learned the lesson of filial piety. It is they who contribute to the support of the college in her old age. It is they who give of their plenteous substance to keep her ever young, that she may lift her head above the finest in the land. In short, it is they who are responsible for even the radicals' blessing of education. And yet these unkind heretics turn upon Harvard to destroy her: for they demand the heads, or rather the pocketbooks, of her dutiful sons. Not content with that, they brand the exemplary ones with aiding and abetting the system of competition and capitalism which they proclaim to be responsible for the evil that is in the world.

We should expect the radicals to realize that they are in fact spurning the education but for which they might be following in their fathers' footsteps and voting the good old ticket. But no. If something in the conduct of the University is painfully out of accord with their principles, they dauntlessly proceed to agitate, to teach the powers that be a lesson in University administration. If the gentle creatures commonly known as goodies receive what seems to the radicals to be starvation wages, they gallantly make haste to strike a blow for honest chivalry, and din relentlessly at the ears of a patient Bursar. Viola l'intrépidité!

At the beginning and the end of the college course, those at whose feet we spend these four rich years make especial mention of the fact that the University and the world need men who fearlessly express their honest convictions, who seriously attack the problems of the day. With the indifferent, such advice leaves but a transient impression. It is surprising, not to say disconcerting, when the radicals take the matter so seriously as to convince their elders that “They but teach

Bloody instructions, which, being taught, return
To plague the inventor.”

To infer from this that all who are not radical are necessarily indifferent, would be an unwarranted injustice to the conservatives, many of whom differ from the radicals in method rather than in earnestness. Still, it is the radicals who make the fuss. It is they who appear to be a positively harmful influence in the University.

Not if we do them the justice to consider their point of view. For at bottom, it is the radical, not the conservative undergraduate, who is doing most to free Harvard from the opprobrious epithet, “Rich Man’s College.” It is the radical, not the conservative, who is showing the working-men that Harvard contains men in sympathy with their movement. Last September, when the Socialist Club marched behind its banner to the Debs rally at the Arena, the ovation it received from the thousands of men and women gathered there meant something for Harvard.

This is said with no intent to minimize the importance of the social service in which three hundred fifty-odd undergraduates are engaged. But the work of conducting boys’ clubs, teaching night-school, and so on, valuable as it is as an opportunity for direct and immediate service, often passes unheeded by the sullen, radical type of workingmen. Usually these troublesome malcontents eye it askance as a capitalist palliative. Thus among the really “dangerous” element of the working class, the efforts of the more conservative social workers are often handicapped by the fact that they do not represent the one movement these men will pay attention to. It is here that the Socialists, who, as I have said, form the great majority of the radicals at Harvard, find their opportunity. They perceive the power and immensity of the class struggle. They are justified in offering their remedy for it.

“But why,” they protest, “in the event of our propaganda succeeding, should the downfall of higher education be the result?” And why should it, indeed? There is not a radical at large in this University who does not believe with all his heart in higher education and lots of it,—any more than there is a conservative who does not believe the very same thing. But in judging by appearances, one is likely to conclude that the radicals are undermining the financial structure of the University, when in reality they are striving for Alma Mater with all their might.

They are simply tired of being told that a college education is one of our greatest privileges. They dislike the word privilege. They use it every time they speak of the wealthy classes. If money did not procure education, they would rather see even money under private control than the still greater riches of learning. And so, with an eye on the flourishing State Universities of the West, they forge ahead in their attempt to make our heritage open to all who will share it. Let us, then, instead of criticising them for turning against their benefactors, count them loyal sons of Harvard. For they are throwing themselves heart and soul into the task of making the University a greater power for social justice. If their efforts are rewarded with any success, the nation and the world will join with Harvard in thanking her radicals.
